drawings that we originally made the blocks from in our first edition from 1903. Only two of these were used in the 1902 edition, and these are available on pages 40 and 43 of this (1958) edition' (letter of 28 January 1959). In addition, the ninth illustration was only used in the 1902 edition. There are another seven records in the Warne edition, the drawings of which are not available at the Tate Gallery. She had many pets, and through holidays in Scotland and the Lake District, developed a love of landscape, flora and fauna, all of which she closely observed and painted. Because she was a woman, her parents discouraged intellectual development, but her study and paintings of mushrooms led her to become widely respected in the field of mycology. In the Thirties, Potter published the highly successful children's book The Tale of Peter Rabbit and was secretly engaged to his publisher, Norman Warne, causing a breakup with her parents, who disapproved of his social status. Warne died before the wedding. Potter eventually published 24 children's books, the most recent of which was The Tale of Kitty-in-Boots (2016), and, after becoming financially independent from her parents, was able to buy a farm in the Lake District, which she extended with other purchases over time. In her forties, she married a local lawyer, William. She became a sheep sheep and farmer while he continues to write and illustrate children's books. Potter died in 1943 and left almost all of her estate to the National Trust to preserve the beauty of the Lake District as she had known it, protecting it from developers. Potter's books continue to sell well around the world, in multiple languages. Her stories have been retold in various formats, including a ballet, film and animation. 1902 children's book by Beatrix Potter The Tailor of Gloucester First edition coverAuthorBeatrix PotterIllustratorBeatrix PotterCountryEngland, BritainLanguageEnglishGenreChildren's literaturePublisherFrederick Warne & Co.Publication dateOctober 1903Media typePrint (hardcover) KOOLC84366Preced by*The Tale of Squirrel Nutkin* Followed by Tale of Benjamin Bunny The Tailor of Gloucester is a children's book written and illustrated by Beatrix Potter, privately printed by the author in 1902, and published in a commercial edition of Frederick Warne & Co. in October 1903. The story is about a tailor whose work on a vest is finished with the grateful mice he rescues from his cat and was based on a real-world incident involving a tailor and his assistants. For years, Potter declared that of all her books, it was her personal favorite. [1] Plot A tailor in Gloucester sends his cat Simpkin to buy food and a twist of cherry-colored silk to complete a vest ordered by the mayor for his wedding on Christmas morning. While Simpkin is gone, the tailor finds mice that the cat has imprisoned under teacups. The mice are released and scamper away. When Simpkin returns and finds his mice gone, he hides the twist in anger. The tailor gets sick and is unable to complete the vest, but when he returns to his shop, he is surprised to find the vest finished. The work is done by the grateful mice. But a buttonhole remains unfinished because there was no more twist! Simpkin gives the tailor twist to complete the work and the success of the west makes the tailor fortune. Composition In the summer of 1901, Potter worked on The Tale of Squirrel Nutkin, but took the time to develop a tale of a poor tailor she heard at The Gloucestershire home of her cousin Caroline Hutton probably in 1897. The tale was finished at Christmas 1901, and given as a Christmas present to ten-year-old Freda Moore, daughter of her former governor. [2] [3] Potter visited a museum to refine her illustrations of eighteenth century dress. The tale was based on a real world incident involving John Prichard (1877-1934),[4] a Gloucester tailor commissioned to make a suit for the new mayor. He returned to his store on a Monday morning to find the suit completed except for a buttonhole. An attached note read, No more twist. His assistants had finished the coat at night, but Prichard encouraged a fiction that fairies had done the work, and the incident became a local legend. [5] Although Prichard was a modern Potter's (he (he around eleven years her junior and in her twenties when the incident took place), Potter's tailor is shown as a little old man in glasses, with a pinched face, old crooked fingers, and the action in The Tailor of Gloucester takes place in the 1700s. Potter sketched Gloucester street, where the tailor shop stood as well as cottage interiors, porcelain and furniture. Son of Hutton's coachman posed as a model for the tailor. In Chelsea, Potter was allowed to draw the interior of a tailor shop to whose proprietor she would later send a copy. [4] [6] She visited the costume department at South Kensington Museum to refine her 18th-century dress illustrations. [7] Potter later lent Freda Moore's gift-giving, revised the work, and printed the story privately in December 1902. [8] She marketed the book among family and friends and sent a copy to her publisher, which made several cuts in both text and illustrations for the commercial edition, mainly among the story's many children's rhymes. [3] The publication story Squirrel Nutkin was published in August 1903 and Tailor in October 1903. [1] Both were published in deluxe editions bound in a floral chintz of scattered stepmother flowers the author chosen. The well-known illustrated endpapers of Potter characters in a chain bordering the edges of the page were introduced in both books against Potter's better judgment. Warne, however, was pleased with the commercial potential of the final papers, because new characters hinting at future titles could be worked into the design at any time. Reception The mice, who sizzle Potter, gave a copy of the book to his Chelsea tailor, who in turn showed it to a representative of the trade magazine The Tailor & Cutter. The journal's review was published on Christmas Eve 1903:[...] We think it is by far the most beautiful story in the context of tailoring we have ever read, and since it is full of this spirit of peace on Earth, Goodwill to men, we are not ashamed to admit that it brought moisture to our eyes, as well as smiles to our face. It is stood up in the most exquisite style and illustrated by twenty-seven of the most beautiful images it is possible to imagine. [10] Adaptations In 1988, Rabbit Ears Productions produced a storyteller version by Meryl Streep, drawings by David Jorgensen and music by The Chieftains. Ian Holm played the tailor in a live-action TV adaptation in 1989, which included Thora Hird and Jude Law in an early part as the mayor's stableboy. In 1993, the story was adapted for the BBC anthology series, The World of Peter Rabbit and Friends. Derek Griffiths was the voice of Simpkin and Ian Holm the tailor. The episode was dedicated to Dianne Jackson, who died of cancer on New Year's Eve 1992.
